1. The Four Forces of Change

Do you feel the pressure to do more, with less, faster? In this video Dom delves into the four forces of change: Increasing complexity, rising accountability, compression of time and space & rising expectations on behalf of everyone about everything.

2. If you knew what I knew what I knew you'd be unstoppable

Tap into the wisdom of your staff and help people get access to right information at the right time to help them get their job done. Apply the power of social network to your enterprise and build your networks at the speed of what you are looking for.

3. The Power of Ignorance

Selectively and deliberately employ the power of ignorance to help you see opportunity where you otherwise may not. Take a look at a fascinating example of a hospital emergency room adapting their procedures based on those of a Ferrari racing team to minimise fatalities.

4. The Holy Trinity of Collaboration

Take a look at how people from around the world are embracing new social technologies to drive collaboration. The holy trinity: Social networking, content sharing tools, knowledge aggregation tools.

5. Winning the War for Talent

The number one tool organisations can use to attract and engage talent is telling the right stories. By setting the intention of the business as a whole and showing your staff that they are all equally valued you can get the best results.

6. Leading as a Change Agent

If you want to change the way people behave as a leader you have to do two things, let them actively see the results of their work, good and bad & give them authority and responsibility to effect change within their own realm.
